

SCARE PLANNED
FOR MARELLO.

Taken at Night to the Morgue, Where He Is Confronted with the Body of Murdered Madonia.

BUT HE DOESN'T WEAKEN.

Persists in Denial of Association with the Crime, Notwithstanding a Tell-Tale Letter Found in His Effects.

"Poor fellow, I do not know him." Giuseppe Marello, reputed leader of the Mafia band of counterfeiters accused of the murder of Benedetto Madonia, shook his head slowly and repeated the words as he looked without trace of emotion upon the mutilated body of the man of whose murder he has been accused.

Marello proved himself a man of iron nerve. His journey to the Morgue was the first step in the "Third Degree" ordeal which will be worked upon the twelve suspects now confined in the House of Detention.

A Nerve-Racking Ordeal.

After a racking day on the witness stand, forced to admit the receipt of a letter from the murdered man after he had been ever having heard from him; made to look at the letter in which Madonia, the baron victim, betrayed his membership in Marello's gang and breathed hatred and revenge against his leader; accompanied by Secret Service men, who described to him every movement he had made in company with the murdered man up to twelve hours before the murder was discovered, Marello was dragged from his cell, thrust into a carriage and driven to the Morgue, where he was led through dark corridors until a door swung open and he was thrust suddenly into the gloom of a mortuary chamber, where lay the mangled and mangled body of the Mafia victim.

Every preparation had been made to render the scene dramatic. The body of Madonia was stripped of every covering and the gaping wound in the throat revealed in all its horror. A single electric bulb threw light down on the ghastly sight. Everywhere else was darkness and the damp odor of the chapel house.

Face to Face with the Dead.
Marello, sallow-faced, cat-eyed, was thrust against the body. His face was

MARELLO SUSPECT IN MAFIA CASE.

within two feet of the dead man's. At his elbow stood an interpreter. Behind him a Secret Service operator and two detectives.

"That is the man you took to the bureau in Stanton street," said the interpreter, echoing the words of the Secret Service men.

Marello shook his head.
"That is the man who wrote you the letter from Pittsburgh. That is the man Benedetto you said to-day you had seen in your cafe in Prince street."

Accusation upon accusation was hurled at him. His damaging words on the witness stand were recalled, but Marello, recoiling from the body, denied everything.

The Incriminating Letter.
Evidence that Madonia was a member of Giuseppe Marello's gang was secured by the police through the finding of a letter written by Madonia to Marello from Pittsburgh on March 23.

The letter was turned over to Assistant District Attorney Garvan by the Secret Service men, and Marello was forced to acknowledge it on the witness stand.

It seems from the letter that several months ago Vito Laduco, proprietor of the butcher shop at No. 16 Stanton street, where Madonia was last seen alive with members of the Mafia gang, was arrested in Pittsburgh with two companions on a charge of counterfeiting. He was discharged and came back to this city, but Marello sent him back to help out his companions.

He failed, and then Marello wrote Madonia at Buffalo to go to Pittsburgh and see what he could do for the members of the gang.

Madonia went to Pittsburgh, but could do nothing, and wrote Marello, abusing him for sending bunglers to look after the fate of men under arrest. He accused him of being indifferent to the fate of his associates and unwilling to spend money to help them. The alleged treachery to Madonia's brother-in-law, De Prima, was referred to, and Madonia wound up by declaring that he was done with Marello and his associates. The entire letter indicates that Madonia was one of Marello's confidants and had fallen out with him.

In addition to the letter the Secret Service men found a printed page on which the name of Benedetto Madonia was written in red ink.

MAN MISSING;
WIFE FEARFUL.

Mrs. Herriek in Double Trepidation for Fate of Husband, Who Has Now Been Gone
Three Days.

HONDURAN GIRL CHARMER.

Frank P. Herriek, a veteran locomotive engineer, mysteriously disappeared from his home at No. 337 Lenox avenue three days ago and his wife fears he has either been killed or has eloped with a beautiful Honduran girl with whom he was formerly enamored.
Mrs. Herriek spent the morning today visiting morgues and hospitals searching for traces of him. Her fear that he may have been killed arises from the fact that a few weeks ago he was a member of a jury that convicted an Italian for murdering a woman and disposing of her body. Mrs. Herriek thinks it possible some of the Ital-ian's friends may have sought revenge, but she is perhaps more troubled by the possibility that the Honduran girl has reclaimed her old love. Herriek was in Honduras for several years as a locomotive engineer and was long an admirer of a fascinating Honduran girl.

Now the wife believes this witch from the tropics may have woven her spell afresh about the man. The Honduran may have come ere, shays Mrs. Herriek.
Herriek could not have been lured away, says his wife, except for the fact that his mind is clouded as the result of a railroad accident of years ago when he ran a locomotive on the New York Central. His mind has never been clear since.

FOR BOROUGH HALL SITE.

Presidents Fornes and Cassidy Make Auto Tour of L. I. City.
President Fornes, of the Board of Aldermen, made an automobile trip to Long Island City to-day, and, with Borough President Cassidy, of Queens, inspected proposed sites for a new borough hall for which the Board of Estimate has appropriated $100,000.
The Pennsylvania Railroad Company wants the new city building erected in Jamaica, but the residents of the borough favor a site in Long Island City close to the terminal of the proposed Pennsylvania tunnel.
